Wary Williger

The Daily Novelle.

Fourteen bulldozers barking boldly, Are not half as bad, I think, As a woman laughing coyly, Or an appetite for drink.

"THAT'S a nice looking cigar sticking out of your vest, Williger," said Snoughly a little earlier in the afternoon. "A Flora de Knockmover, isn't it?"

Williger G. Williger, who was already smoking a Flora de Knockmover, winked meaningly. "If I didn't like you so much, I might let you smoke it, Snoughly. Ha, ha!"

Ha, ha, echoed Snoughly, and he took it on the joke. "Thanks for putting me wise, old man."

"Don't mention it," said Williger, and after this, responded Snoughly.

An hour later Williger, reaching for his fountain pen, again inadvertently exposed the Flora de Knockmover.

"Ah, my favorite brand!" cried Kill-joy Rappita, springing it.

"I'd like to see you smoke it, Rappita," said Williger, "but I am too fond of you. It's loaded, Ha, ha!"

"A mere bag of shells," said Williger heartily. "Excuse me."

And he walked around the corner, drew the Flora de Knockmover from his vest pocket and smoked it with great relish down to the last eighth of an inch.
